Description

A 2027 PJ 7 x 14 ft high side dump trailer for demolition and tear-off — 48-inch walls, roughly 14 cubic yards, and a 10-gauge floor that takes broken concrete.

Demo debris is the material that punishes a dump trailer. It is bulky, it has sharp edges, and it gets dropped in rather than placed. Forty-eight-inch sides mean a gut job or a tear-off fills the box instead of spilling over a 24-inch rail, and the floor under it is specified accordingly.

Ten-gauge steel floor. Plaster, lath, broken block, shingles and busted concrete do not load gently. A 10-gauge floor over 3-inch crossmembers on 16-inch centers, all carried on a 6-inch C-channel mainframe, is what keeps the bed from dishing after the first dozen loads.

Fourteen yards is the number to plan around. Mixed demo debris runs light for its volume, so you will usually fill this box before you approach the 9,770 lb payload. Concrete and masonry are the exception — those go heavy fast, and you will be at capacity around three and a half yards with plenty of box left. Load the heavy material low and forward.

Equipment ramp kit included. These are equipment ramps, rated for machines — a Dingo or similar compact utility loader, a skid steer, a mini excavator, a medium tractor. Bring the machine that does the tear-out and take the debris away on the same trailer.

Split spreader gate. Open wide to clear a full load in one dump at the transfer station, or latch the top when you are hauling something you would rather meter out.

Unloading and hauling. 12V hydraulic pump with a scissor hoist. Dual 7,000 lb axles with electric brakes on both, EZ-lube hubs, radial tires, LED lighting. D-rings in the bed and stake pockets down the sides for tie-downs or side rail extensions. 2-5/16 in adjustable coupler. Tarp kit included, which matters more on debris loads than on anything else you will haul.

Specs. 168 in x 83 in bed, 48 in sides, 14,000 lb GVWR, 4,230 lbs empty, 9,770 lb payload.

Towing. Three-quarter-ton or better with a brake controller.
